The situation was complicated by the abrupt economic recession due to the pandemic, even though a Chinese recovery is offering some hope. The recovery of oil markets is a litmus test for many other parts of the global economy. Panellists at this session will share their vision of the future of the oil markets and discuss whether Europe’s focus on the green economy still has potential under these new market conditions. Moderator: Alessandro CASSIERI, RAI PARIS – Bureau Chief (Italy) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Igor SECIN, President and CEO, Rosneft (Russia)

14:30–15:30	Session 1 Different global recovery models and strategies for rebooting economic growth and prosperous international trade Auditorium Financing will be key to rapidly reversing the global economic downturn. What should be done to ensure that fiscal stimuli contribute to sustainable economic development and reach those parts of economy which are most in need, rather than end up in the speculative financial markets? The European Union, for example, is leveraging the recovery from the pandemic in such a way as to advance its green political agenda. Other countries prefer to focus on infrastructure investments or to support specific business sectors such as healthcare. What can we learn from the economic recovery in the wake of the 2008 crisis in order to avoid repeating the mistakes of the past? Moderator: Guido DE VECCHI, General Director, Intesa Sanpaolo Innovation Center (Italy) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Marco TRONCHETTI PROVERA, Chief Executive Officer, Executive Vice Chairman, Pirelli & C. 15:30–15:45	Coffee break Bouvette
15:45–16:45	Session 2 Prospects for the gas industry, particularly LNG, in the new economic reality Auditorium The gas industry, like most other businesses, has been negatively affected by the global economic downturn. When will demand and prices recover? Has natural gas completely decoupled from the oil markets, and do we need so many new pipelines and more LNG infrastructure at this moment? Is it time for the industry to embrace hydrogen in response to Europe's new political pledge in favour of this energy resource? These are some of the key issues which will come under focus at this panel discussion. Moderator: Alessandro CASSIERI, RAI PARIS – Bureau Chief (Italy) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Leonid MIKHELSON, Chairman of the Management Board, Member of the Board of Directors, Novatek (Russia) (video online) • Elena BURMISTROVA, Deputy Chairman of the Management Committee, Gazprom; General Director, Gazprom Export (Russia) (video online) • Patrick POUYANNÉ, Chairman & CEO, TOTAL (France) (video online) • Konstantin SIMONOV, General Director, National Energy Security Fund (Russia) • Mikhail VOLKOV, Head of Representative Office of VTB Bank (PJSC) in Italy, Vice president (Russia)
16:45–17:45	Session 3 The structural economic crisis and the pandemic: seeking a new geopolitical and socioeconomic order (Europe, Eurasia, USA, China) Auditorium The pandemic is providing an opportunity to review and reanalyse the disruption to the global economy which has been in systemic crisis mode ever since 2008. Cosmetic touch-ups will not work – the way forward can only involve systemic reforms which bring about profound changes in many areas of life. However, major powers have different agendas (as growing tensions between the US and China seem to indicate), while Europe is being forced to choose between its Eastern and Western allies. The role of international institutions like the WTO and WHO is also being fundamentally questioned. The success of the global recovery will be determined by cooperation – or the lack thereof – between the major global players who will set the course of economic development for decades to come. Moderator: Kirill BARSKIY, Ambassador-at-Large, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation

Session 4

The key role of genetics and genome research in the new socioeconomic reality: the contribution made by gene technology to medicine, the environment, agriculture, industry and energy

Auditorium

The calamitous events of 2020 redefined many priorities but also opened up potential and opportunities. This is particularly true of genetics and genome research. This field not only offers enormous potential in terms of healthcare, it can also pave the way for breakthroughs in other areas of the economy. Given the fact that genome work is perceived very differently in the East and the West, will the key to success lie in international cooperation and possibly new global standards? Who should take the lead in this field?

12:00–13:00	Session 7 The current socioeconomic crisis: is it time to re-energize dialogue between Europe and Russia? Auditorium To ensure sustainable and balanced economic growth from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a market needs to be regulated by compatible and consistent norms based on economic cooperation. That is why regional economic associations, in particular the European Union and the Eurasian Economic Union, need to step up their level of collaboration. However, progress is being hampered by faltering political dialogue, which remains stuck at the take-off stage. Is the new economic reality significantly affecting the relationship between Europe and Russia, or do they remain captive to the misunderstandings of the past? Is it time for the parties to start looking for mutually beneficial solutions to common problems? As a new European Commission takes the reins in Brussels and significant developments occur on the international stage (such as rising trade tensions between US and China or the winding-down of conflict in the Middle East), could this be the time for Russia and the EU to re-engage and start a new chapter marked by more dynamic cooperation? Has that time come, and who should take the lead – Moscow or Brussels? Moderator: Mark ENTIN, Head of the European Law Chair; Professor, MGIMO University; Ambassador of Russia to Luxembourg, 2012–2016 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Roberto ANTONIONE, Secretary General, Central European Initiative (CEI) • Zeno D'AGOSTINO, President, Authority Port System of the Eastern Adriatic Sea (Italy) • Donato IACOVONE, Chairman of the Board of Directors of Webuild • Sergey KARAGANOV, Dean, Faculty of World Economy and International Affairs, National Research University Higher School of Economics (video online) • Enrico PAZZALI, President of Fondazione Fiera Milano • Victor VEKSELBERG, Chairman of the Board, Skolkovo Foundation (Russia)

Rethinking global healthcare systems in the Covid-19 era

Auditorium

The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the significant shortcomings of healthcare systems around the world. At the same time, it has presented business owners, managers, and municipal leaders with new challenges in creating and maintaining a safe, productive work environment and secure public services and spaces. What new preparatory steps might national and local healthcare officials take to better manage future multiple waves of COVID-19 – as well as outbreaks of new deadly infectious diseases – without having to fall back on economically damaging draconian lockdowns? How can better international coordination between economies and deeper public-private collaboration in the sphere of medical technology lead to more secure health infrastructure and better responses to pandemic threats? What technologies and innovative practices can managers deploy to enable their businesses to sustain themselves and potentially thrive in this rapidly evolving era?
